Review 1 — Units 1 to 5

Fully solved review: comprehension, vocabulary and grammar, oral communication and four writing tasks

A. Reading and Critical Thinking

1. In what ways did Hazrat Muhammad (PBUH) reform the society of the then Arab?

Before Islam, Arab society was tribal, patriarchal and unjust: women had no inheritance or choice in marriage, newborn girls were buried alive, orphans were exploited and their property was taken, and slaves were treated as subhuman. Hazrat Muhammad (PBUH) changed all three areas by law and by teaching, on the guidance of the Qur'an:

(i) Women: he gave them the right to own and inherit property (Qur'an 4:7), made their consent necessary for marriage, gave them fair treatment and maintenance in divorce (2:241), and made education obligatory for them. He also involved women in public matters and in treaties.

(ii) Orphans: guardians were made accountable for their property (4:6), eating it wrongfully was declared a major sin (4:10), and caring for an orphan was promised a place near him in Paradise (Bukhari).

(iii) Slaves: freeing slaves was made a great virtue (90:13), slaves were to be fed and clothed like their masters (Sahih Muslim), they could buy freedom by the mukataba contract, and a former slave, Hazrat Bilal (RA), became the muazzin of Islam.

Beyond these groups he built one brotherhood out of tribes that had fought for generations, and the Last Sermon declared that no Arab is superior to a non-Arab except by piety. So he reformed the society's law, its economy and, above all, its heart.

2. What feelings does the poet express towards the flag in these lines? “Your flag of green and star so white, / Shines like a beacon in the night. / We hold it high, both proud and strong, / In every heart, your name belongs.”

The poet expresses four feelings for the national flag. (i) Reverence: he calls the flag “your flag”, addressing the country itself, so the flag and the homeland become one sacred thing. (ii) Guidance: the simile “shines like a beacon in the night” shows the flag as a light that leads the nation out of darkness. (iii) Pride and strength: “we hold it high, both proud and strong” shows collective honour and confidence. (iv) Belonging and devotion: “in every heart, your name belongs” shows that love for the flag is not on the flagpole only but inside every citizen's heart, and it will never be removed.

3. What are the two positive and two negative effects of digital globalisation on the English language?

Positive effects: (i) Growth of vocabulary and creativity — new words such as hashtag, selfie, unfriend and meme, and new forms such as emojis, have made English richer and more expressive; (ii) greater inclusiveness and flexibility — English now absorbs words from other cultures and mixes with local languages (Taglish, Singlish), so it has become a truly global language shaped by its speakers.

Negative effects: (i) loosening of grammar and spelling — in texts and tweets articles, punctuation and capitals are dropped, so accuracy falls ("goin 2 store"); (ii) dominance and loss — the pressure to use English on every platform marginalises local languages and regional accents, and smaller languages risk extinction.

4. Why is climate change considered both an environmental and a social justice issue?

It is an environmental issue because it is caused by greenhouse gases from fossil fuels, deforestation and industry, and it damages the natural systems on which life depends: glaciers melt, the seas rise, weather becomes extreme, and ecosystems are destroyed.

It is a social justice issue because its burden is not shared equally. The countries that pollute the least — the poor and developing countries — suffer the most, because they lack the money, technology and infrastructure to protect themselves or to recover after floods and droughts. Within every country the poorest families lose their homes and crops first. The people who caused the problem least are punished most, and that is exactly what injustice means; this is why the essay calls climate action "a matter of justice and fairness".

B. Vocabulary and Grammar

1. Find the meanings of the words "reforms" and "oppressed" as used in Unit 1.

Reforms: changes made to improve a system, law or organisation. In Unit 1 the word means the changes introduced by Hazrat Muhammad (PBUH) to remove the injustices of Arab society — reforms for women, orphans and slaves.

Oppressed: treated cruelly or unfairly, especially by those in power. In Unit 1 it describes the weak groups of pre-Islamic Arabia — women, orphans and slaves — who had no protection of law.

2. Identify and label the adjectival, prepositional and adverbial phrases in: "Because English is the default language on most digital platforms, non-native speakers often feel pressured to adopt it in order to access information."

Phrase	Label	Work it does
on most digital platforms	Prepositional phrase, used as an adjectival phrase	Describes the noun "language" — which language?

study-sapiens.com

Phrase	Label	Work it does
in order to access information	Prepositional / infinitive phrase, used as an adverbial phrase	Tells why the speakers feel pressured — purpose.
to adopt it	Infinitive phrase, used as an adverbial phrase	Completes “feel pressured” and tells what they are pressed to do.

Note: “Because English is the default language…” is a clause (it has a subject and a verb), not a phrase.

3. Identify the part of speech of each underlined word: “Wow! He was truly popular among the men, for he clearly had every remarkable accomplishment — except, unfortunately, the ability to earn money.”

Word	Part of speech	Reason
Wow!	Interjection	It expresses sudden surprise or admiration.
He	Pronoun	It stands in place of the noun “man”.
was	Verb	It shows a state of being.
truly	Adverb	It modifies the adjective “popular”.
popular	Adjective	It describes the pronoun “he”.
among	Preposition	It shows the relation of “popular” to “the men”.
for	Conjunction	It joins the two parts of the sentence and gives a reason.
accomplishment	Noun	It names a thing.
clearly	Adverb	It modifies the verb “had”.
except	Preposition	It shows exclusion, like “without”.
unfortunately	Adverb	It modifies the whole statement.
earn	Verb	It shows the action of getting money.

The eight labels printed in the book are covered by the first eight rows; the last four rows show the remaining words for full practice.

C. Oral Communication Skills

1. How does the poet use imagery to show pride and love for the flag, and how would you describe your own feelings for your country's flag?

Imagery of the poet: the flag is not described as cloth but as a light — “shines like a beacon in the night” — so the reader sees a bright point in darkness and feels safety and guidance. The colours “green and star so white” give a clear, simple picture, and the physical action “we hold it high” makes the reader see raised hands and straight backs, which is the picture of pride itself. The last line turns the picture inward, from the eye to the heart.

My own feelings: when I see our flag rise in the morning assembly, I feel a quiet pride and a kind of promise. It reminds me of the millions who left their homes in 1947 for a country they had never seen, and of the soldiers who guard its borders. It also makes me feel responsible: the flag is green and white, clean and simple, and it asks the same of me — that my work and my words should be clean enough to honour it.

D. Writing Skills

1. Describe how Hazrat Muhammad's (PBUH) life serves as a model to make the Arabian society a just one.

The life of Hazrat Muhammad (PBUH) is the best model of social justice because he did not only teach justice — he practised it first and asked others to follow afterwards. He lived simply even when the whole of Arabia was under his authority, so no poor man could feel that wealth was a virtue. He gave the weak their legal rights and then protected those rights in practice: he ordered that slaves be fed from the master's own food and clothed from his own cloth, and he freed his own slaves, such as Hazrat Zaid ibn Harithah. He made it impossible to take an orphan's property, and he said that he and one who cares for an orphan would be together in Paradise, holding up two fingers to show how close. He honoured people by their piety, not by birth — Hazrat Bilal, a former slave, became the caller of the prayer. In his Last Sermon he declared that no Arab has superiority over a non-Arab and no white over a black except by piety. Justice in his society therefore rested on three pillars: law that gave the weak their rights, a leader who obeyed his own law, and a community trained by example. That is exactly how any society today can become a just one.

2. Write a short paragraph explaining how digital globalisation is changing the way people speak English.

Digital globalisation is changing English speech faster than any textbook could. YouTube, films and short videos bring American and British pronunciation into the bedroom of a student in Multan, so accents slowly blend and a new international speech pattern is appearing among young people. Slang spreads in days, not years: a phrase used by a famous vlogger is repeated by millions the next morning, and words from other languages — hindi words, Japanese food names, Arabic greetings — sit comfortably inside an English sentence. In chat and voice notes, speed rules: words are shortened (gonna, u, plz), grammar is relaxed and the tone is carried by emojis and voice pitch rather than by complete sentences. The result is an English that is more varied, more relaxed and more mixed with local identity than the neat printed English of the past.

3. Write a persuasive paragraph (6–8 sentences) arguing why wealthier nations should take more responsibility in fighting climate change, especially for the sake of poorer and developing countries.

Wealthy nations must take the greater responsibility in fighting climate change, and the argument is a matter of simple fairness. They began burning coal and oil two hundred years ago and have filled the atmosphere with the gases that are warming the earth today, while countries like ours have added only a small share. The bill for the damage, however, is paid by the poor: in Pakistan the floods of 2022 displaced millions of people who had done least to change the climate. Wealthy countries also have the money, the technology and the scientists to help, and they can fund solar power, flood protection and early warning systems in developing states. Their industries need to cut emissions first, because the atmosphere is a single room and one person's smoke fills it for everyone. If they refuse, they save money today and lose both credibility at the climate talks and the trust of a suffering world tomorrow. Climate justice is therefore not charity; it is the price of the harm already done, and paying it is the only way to keep the planet habitable for all of us.

4. Write a character sketch of the Happy Prince. Describe his personality, strengths, weaknesses and lifestyle. Use descriptive language and at least one example from the text.

The Happy Prince is a gilded statue standing on a tall column above a city, with two bright sapphires for eyes and a large red ruby glowing on the hilt of his sword. But his real character is not in his gold.

Earlier life and its weakness: in his youth he lived in the Sans-Souci Palace, where sorrow was not allowed even to enter. He was called happy, yet his happiness was only a lack of knowledge — he was blind to the poverty outside the palace wall. This ignorance is his one real weakness, and he himself admits it when he sees the city and weeps for the first time.

Personality: he is gentle, tender-hearted and extraordinarily generous. He can see the pain of a single person in a city — a seamstress's fingers, a young writer's hunger, a match-girl's tears — and he calls their suffering the deepest mystery of all:

“There is no Mystery so great as Misery.” He is also patient and loving towards the little Swallow, asking him to stay one night at a time and caring about his journey to Egypt.

Strengths: his greatest strength is sacrifice without return. He gives his ruby, then both his eyes, then the gold leaf off his own body, and he becomes plain, blind and grey, but he never regrets it. He is the kind of character who would rather be ugly and useful than beautiful and useless.

Lifestyle: he lives the life of an image, fixed and unable to move — he must ask the Swallow to do his giving for him. His power to help is therefore small and handmade, one gift at a time, but his heart grows bigger with every gift, until the leaden heart cracks in two at the death of the bird and is taken by God's angel as one of the two most precious things in the city. In short, the Happy Prince is a character who begins as beautiful metal and ends as true gold.

Points to Remember — Review 1 (Units 1–5)

• Unit 1 (Hazrat Muhammad PBUH): reform of women, orphans and slaves on the guidance of the Qur'an; key verses 4:7, 4:6, 4:10, 49:13, 90:13; Last Sermon on equality.

• Unit 2 (My Beloved Pakistan): flag = beacon in the night; work, learn, stand united; peace and love.

• Unit 3 (Digital Globalisation): new words, relaxed grammar, hybrid varieties (Taglish, Singlish), dominance of English; phrases and denotation/connotation.

• Unit 4 (The Earth): causes, effects, Paris Agreement 2015 (below 2°C), climate justice; euphemism and oxymoron.

• Unit 5 (The Happy Prince): sacrifice of ruby, sapphires and gold; the leaden heart that will not melt; parts of speech; rhetorical questions.

• Phrase labels: adjectival (describes a noun), prepositional (begins with a preposition), adverbial (how, when, where, why).

• Eight parts of speech: noun, pronoun, verb, adjective, adverb, preposition, conjunction, interjection.
