Reading and Critical Thinking

A. Answer the following questions.

1. How do you personally define patriotism? Give an example from your life or community.

Patriotism is sincere concern for one's country, shown through responsible action rather than slogans alone. For example, residents who keep their neighbourhood clean, conserve water, report a safety hazard and help maintain a public park serve the common good. Their actions improve shared life and show devotion to the country in a practical way.

2. Why were Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah's efforts crucial in securing a separate homeland for Muslims?

He organized and articulated a collective political demand, provided determined leadership and gave Muslims a strong sense of identity and purpose. His constitutional, disciplined approach helped unite different groups around the goal of a homeland where their values, culture and traditions could be protected. The achievement therefore depended on both vision and sustained organization.

3. Why are the soldiers mentioned in the text considered heroes? What qualities do they show?

They are heroes because they defended the motherland at great personal risk and, in the examples listed, gave their lives. They display courage, loyalty, discipline, selflessness and readiness to place national safety above personal comfort. Their decorations formally recognize this exceptional service and sacrifice.

4. How can patriotism be maintained in a globally connected society? Give modern examples.

Global connection need not weaken local responsibility. People can learn accurate national history, celebrate cultural achievements, support local products and research, vote responsibly, protect the environment and volunteer during emergencies. Students can use digital platforms to correct misinformation, promote tourism or share community projects. These actions combine a global outlook with commitment to national welfare.

5. What does S. W. Scott mean by "a man devoid of patriotic spirit"? Do you agree?

The lines portray a person who feels no belonging or gratitude towards his native land as emotionally impoverished. The rhetorical question suggests that love for one's homeland is a natural and admirable feeling. I agree that attachment can inspire service and sacrifice, but patriotism should remain informed and ethical; love for one's country does not justify hatred or injustice towards others.

6. How can schools teach patriotism, and why is it important?

Schools can teach accurate history, discuss national symbols critically, commemorate important days, invite community servants, arrange debates and organize service projects. Visits to museums and participation in cleanliness, plantation or relief activities turn knowledge into responsibility. This learning helps students understand their rights and duties and gives them constructive ways to contribute.

7. What small act of patriotism can someone perform every day? How does it help?

A person can avoid littering and dispose of waste properly every day. This simple habit protects public health, reduces drainage blockages, saves municipal resources and sets an example for others. Repeating such responsible behaviour strengthens civic discipline, which is a practical form of patriotism.

8. What did you learn about patriotism from this text?

I learned that patriotism is both feeling and sustained action. It values sovereignty, integrity and honour, unites people and may require sacrifice. Quaid-e-Azam's leadership and the soldiers' examples show different forms of service, while the closing message implies that every citizen should keep the nation's interests and progress in view.

2. "Many soldiers were awarded Nishan-e-Haider for their bravery."

(a) Fact. Award records and recipient names can be checked to verify the statement.

E. Identify a generalized statement or evidence-based information.

(a) Generalized statement. It makes a broad claim without naming a soldier, action or award as supporting evidence.

2. "Major Tufail Muhammad was awarded Nishan-e-Haider for his bravery in the 1965 War."

(b) Evidence-based information. It supplies a named person, a specific award and a particular conflict that can be verified.

They (a) safeguard the country's interests with courage and (b) make great sacrifices without compromising its sovereignty, integrity and honour.

4. Does the text present a strong argument for the importance of patriotism? Give two reasons.

• (a) Principled reason: It links patriotism to concrete national values—security, sovereignty and honour—rather than treating it as emotion alone.

• (b) Supporting reason: Later examples of leadership and decorated soldiers illustrate the sacrifices that patriotic commitment can inspire. The argument becomes stronger because principle is joined to evidence.

Vocabulary and Word Patterns

A–C. Infer, verify and compare meanings.

Word	Context inference	Dictionary meaning / pronunciation	Part of speech commendable	deserving praise	praiseworthy; /kə'mendəbəl/	adjective
render	give or provide	give, provide or make; /'rendə(r)/	verb
sacrifice	giving up life or something valuable	act of giving up something valued for a purpose; /'sækrɪfaɪs/	noun / verb
sovereignty	independent authority of a country	supreme and independent power to govern; /'sɒvrənti/	noun

The inferences match the dictionary meanings in this context. "Render" has several meanings, but "render great sacrifice" here means "give" or "offer" sacrifice.

D–E. Word family of "sovereignty" and sentence use.

Base word	Noun	Verb (related action)	Adjective	Adverb
sovereignty	sovereignty; sovereign (ruler)	reign / rule (natural related verbs)	sovereign	sovereignly (rare)

1. Sovereignty: A country's sovereignty must be respected.

2. Sovereign (noun): The sovereign addressed the assembly in the historical account.

3. Reign / rule: A just government should rule according to the constitution.

4. Sovereign (adjective): Pakistan is a sovereign state.

5. Sovereignly (rare): The word may be used for “in a sovereign manner”, but natural English normally rewrites the sentence.

There is no common everyday verb formed directly from “sovereignty”. Use reign for a monarch or rule/govern for authority. “Sovereignly” is grammatical but uncommon.

A. Underline the verbs in the Maria passage and identify their tenses.

Verb form	Tense
walks	simple present
walked	simple past
was broken	simple past (passive/adjectival state)
will ride	simple future
has been attending	present perfect continuous
loves	simple present
will have completed	future perfect

B. Write a diary entry using at least five different tenses.

Model diary entry

• Friday, 7 November

Today was demanding but rewarding. I attended school as usual and completed my English exercise before the last bell. I have been preparing for this assessment for two weeks, so I felt confident. At present, I am sitting in the library and am writing this entry. I had finished my science homework before I arrived. Tomorrow, I will help at a community book drive, and at ten o'clock I will be sorting donations with my classmates. By next week, we will have collected enough books for two school libraries.

C. Identify each tense and place the events in chronological order.

Event	Tense
I visited Karachi two years ago.	simple past
I have been working on my project for the last three weeks.	present perfect continuous
I had finished my homework before dinner yesterday evening.	past perfect
I am studying for my exams right now.	present continuous

Event	Tense
I will have graduated from the university by next June.	future perfect

Chronology follows the stated time expressions; perfect forms mark completion relative to a reference point.

Grammar: Gerunds, Infinitives and Participles

D. Label the verb forms in the six sentences.

Sentence	Form and function
Swimming is my favourite hobby.	Swimming — gerund; subject of "is".
To learn a new language takes time.	To learn — infinitive; part of the subject infinitive phrase.
The broken window needs to be fixed.	broken — past participle adjective; to be fixed — passive infinitive.
She enjoys reading books.	reading — gerund; object of "enjoys".
To travel around the world is my dream.	To travel — infinitive; part of the subject infinitive phrase.
The running water creates a sweet sound.	running — present participle adjective describing water.

E. Transform write, play and eat, and use each form.

Base	Gerund sentence	Infinitive sentence	Participle sentence
write	Writing improves expression.	I want to write a letter.	The writing hand moved quickly (present); the written answer was clear (past).
play	Playing football builds fitness.	We like to play outside.	The playing children laughed (present); the played match was exciting (past, less natural—use “the match played yesterday”).
eat	Eating slowly aids digestion.	Remember to eat breakfast.	The eating guests talked quietly (present); the eaten meal could not be replaced (past).

The -ing form is a gerund when it acts as a noun and a present participle when it acts as an adjective or part of a continuous verb. Natural alternatives are preferable to awkward sentences such as “the played match”.

F. Write a paragraph with two gerunds, two infinitives and two participles.

Model paragraph with labels

• Reading (gerund) and writing (gerund) are important parts of my study routine. Every evening, I sit at my desk to revise (infinitive) my notes and to prepare (infinitive) for the next day. The completed (past participle) exercises give me confidence, while the remaining (present participle) questions remind me to seek help. This balanced routine keeps learning purposeful and manageable.

Oral Communication Skills

A. Model group response to the text.

Presentation on paragraphs 1–3

• “Our group’s section defines patriotism and connects it with national values. Its main idea is that love for the motherland becomes meaningful through unity, protection and sacrifice. The supporting details are the definition and Latin origin of patriot, the values of sovereignty, integrity and honour, and Quaid-e-Azam Muhammad Ali Jinnah’s leadership in securing a homeland and calling for unity. We conclude that patriotic feeling should guide responsible action.”

B. Debate: “The Role of Youth in Nation-Building”.

Affirmative speech — approximately one minute

• “Respected teachers and classmates, youth are not merely the leaders of tomorrow; they are contributors today. Their education, energy and familiarity with technology can improve public health, environmental protection and digital literacy. A student who tutors a younger child reduces educational inequality. A young volunteer who maps flood needs or plants native trees strengthens community resilience. However, enthusiasm must be joined with discipline, truthful information and respect for differing views. Nation-building becomes possible when young people turn their skills into consistent public service.”

Respectful counterpoint and response

• Counterpoint: “Experience belongs mainly to older citizens, so youth should wait before accepting responsibility.”
Response: “Experience is valuable, but waiting does not create it. Supervised service allows youth to learn from older mentors while contributing time and current skills. Responsibility can match age and ability; it need not mean unsupervised decision-making.”

Writing Skills

Brainstorm and A. Write a paragraph on “My Service to Society”.

• Reading and tutoring younger children
• Collecting books and school supplies
• Keeping streets and parks clean
• Conserving water and electricity
• Helping elderly neighbours with simple tasks
• Sharing accurate emergency information
• Planting suitable native trees
• Showing courtesy and honesty in daily life

studysapiens

Model paragraph: My Service to Society

• I can serve society through small but regular acts of responsibility. My first contribution is to take my education seriously because knowledge and discipline enable me to help others effectively. Every weekend, I can tutor a younger student who finds reading difficult and donate books that I no longer need. I can also keep my street clean, conserve water and encourage my family to sort recyclable waste. When an elderly neighbour needs help with a mobile phone or shopping, I should offer my time respectfully. During emergencies, I must share only verified information and support authorized relief work rather than spreading rumours. These actions may appear modest, but they strengthen trust and solve real problems. My service to society therefore begins with honesty, consistency and concern for the people around me.

B. Write an informative/explanatory essay on “I Love Pakistan”.

Model essay: I Love Pakistan

• Introduction

I love Pakistan because it is my homeland, the place of my family, language, memories and responsibilities. Its mountains, rivers, deserts and coastline show remarkable geographical variety, while its languages and traditions reflect a rich cultural heritage. Love for Pakistan, however, is more than admiration for its beauty. It is a commitment to understand the country honestly and contribute to its improvement.

• People and heritage

Pakistan’s greatest strength is its people. Across cities and villages, daily life reveals hospitality, resilience and a strong sense of family. Historical sites, folk music, regional dress, poetry and cuisine preserve diverse identities while creating shared experiences. Learning about this heritage encourages appreciation rather than stereotypes. It also reminds us that national unity does not require cultural uniformity; people can remain proudly Punjabi, Sindhi, Pashtun, Baloch, Kashmiri or Gilgiti while working together as Pakistanis.

• Responsibility and progress

Constructive patriotism requires action. Students can respect public property, pursue education, reject misinformation and serve their communities. Protecting forests and water resources safeguards future generations, while honesty in work and examinations strengthens institutions. It is also important to recognize problems such as inequality and pollution without losing hope. A truthful citizen does not pretend that every difficulty is solved; instead, love becomes the motivation to find solutions.

• Conclusion

I love Pakistan for what it is and for what its people can make it. Its history gives me identity, its diversity teaches me respect and its future calls me to responsibility. By combining pride with hard work and compassion, I can express this love in ways that benefit both my community and the country as a whole.
